army will be in France before the season closes, announced Secretary Baker today.

Draft age for registrants is to be raised, perhaps to 45, in order that an army of 5,000,000 may be assembled in Europe.

In speaking of the European situation, Secretary Baker said that the German offensive arch rested on two great pillars—Marne and Picardy. The Marne pillar is now valueless and the Germans are striving to prevent its collapsing allogether.

Further, the secretary suggested that the present allied attack is not a major blow, but is merely intended to pin the German forces in that sector. It is possible in the next few days to see an allied assault on both sides of the Picardy front to rush the German reserves to the Alane theater.
